Tax me if you can

Serge, a General Foreman for JH Kelly, a Vancouver based construction firm providing services to commercial facilities, told Session 3 of the Leadership Development Lab™ (LDL):

attending costs. I decided to take the risk.

"I left my easy commute and steady maintenance work to drive through Portland traffic in hopes of getting a promotion on the new job site. It turned out that all the opportunities there were already taken. I didn't let that stop me.

"Every day, I performed to the best of my abilities. My crew and I were recognized for "beating the bid," making money on the project. When the project ended, I was asked to go to the Microchip project. Microchip is in Oregon, but in Gresham, which made the commute a lot easier. The project there was just ramping up, and the General Foreman was promoted to Superintendent. They needed a General Foreman; I was the man for the job. My new position came with a work truck that helped further ease my commuting stress. The Gresham Microchip project was work I knew well, but at a faster pace. This new challenge was just what I wanted.

"The lesson I learned from this experience is when I take the risks required to step out of my comfort zone, to grow and pursue my goals, I always find opportunities for growth and challenges to fill my need for a real sense of purpose and fulfillment.

Serge receiving his award LDL #290

"The action I call you to take is don't be afraid to leave your comfort zone. In fact, I challenge you to look for ways to purposefully expand your comfort zone.

"The benefit you will gain is you will come across new challenges and find there's no limits on your personal growth and advancement."

I love this story and as you strive to Thrive in '25, look for new challenges that will keep you fully alive!
